Influence of Wealth in Society. The intensely practical cast of the American mind, leads us to depreciate theo-eago as short as any other, and with contin-ratical pursuits and exalt the advantages to uous guage. Some of the Pittsburg and retical pursuits and exalt the advantages to be derived from wealth. Our people are undoubtedly possessed of as much intelligence, of as great imaginative powers and more of the Pittsburg and Philadelphia business will also be commanded by this connection; it is longer than the Columbus line, but brings into use 72 miles more of the Pittsburg. Fort Wayne and ingenuity as the inhabitants of the countries of Europe, but we turn our energies to the acquisition of money, and while they excel us in the fine arts, we outstrip them in getting rich. But as the country grows older, money is every day becoming of less consideration in society. There are so many rich per alcould and likely to be so many rich per alcould and likely to be so many rich per alcould and likely to be so many rich per alcould and likely to be so many rich per alcould and likely to be so many rich per alcould and likely to be so many rich per alcould and likely to be so many rich per alcould and likely to be so many rich per alcould and likely to be so many rich per alcould and likely to be so many rich per alcould and likely to be so many rich per alcould and inhabitants are roughly and likely to be so many rich per alcould and inhabitants are roughly and likely to be so many rich per alcould and inhabitants. men already, and likely to be so many more richer still, that the possession of mere depot on the middle ground, with the Michiwealth will entitle a man to no considera- gan Southern, Toledo and Cleveland and tion of itself, unless accompanied by some Toledo and Detroit Railways. With all of other more rational claims to distinction and these lines this road will do a heavy business respect. The rulers of opinion—the men of mark in the nation—are most of them of mark in the nation—are most self-raised men. They may be rich men—that is well so far; but they are all men 5 feet and 15 feet per mile 5 feet and 21 feet per mile 15 feet and 22 feet per mile 15 feet and 25 feet per mile 15 feet per mile 15 feet and 25 feet of moral power, of scient-fic skill, of en. 21 feet and 21 feet per mile lightened judgment, and of large public 21 feet and 26 feet per mile spirit. Many of our statesmen may be wealthy men, but the mass do not know. The entire length of curved line from whether they are not; it is in their intellect Dayton to Toledo, is nine miles, equal to 154 that their power exists, and their influence | miles straight line for one mile of curve so far exceeds all that wealth can give, that the latter consideration is never thought of in the estimation of their character, or in less than 2,855 feet, which is the minimum less than 2,855 fee in the estimation of their character, or in the contemplation of their exalted position in society. If they are possessed of wealth they have generally acquired it themselves, they have generally acquired it themselves, they have generally acquired in the immediate vicinity of towns they have generally acquired it themselves, they have generally acquired it themselves. and used it to enable them to follow the bent a direct line from Cincinnati to Detroit, 256 of their own dispositions, and have made it subservient to the superior qualities of their minds. It is personal qualities, not the accident of birth or the accomplation of gold or acres, which tell upon society at large.—

Money is now at it is the superior qualities of their minds. It is personal qualities, not the accident of birth or the accomplation of gold or the South, and Toledo and Detroit and the whole of Eastern Michigan on the North. Money is power, it is true, but so are intel-ligence, public spirit, and moral virtue that important road a direct Southern outpowers too, and far nobler powers. There let to Cincinnati and the Ohio River, and are men in almost every city, as rich as Crossus, who have no consideration extended to them who elicit no respect, and why?—
They are but money bags; all the influence they are but money bags; all the influence they exert centres in self. Such men are of Kentucky, through Cincinnati, Dayton and they exert centres in self. Such men are of Tolode Obio, to Dayton and Dayton and Dayton and Dayton and Dayton and Dayton and Day no use in society. The men of weight, the Toledo, Ohio, to Detroit, Michigan, and enterprising and successful and useful men through the heart of Canada to Quebec.

The trade between Canada and Ohio is alare not necessarily rich men. They are ready large, and with the Railway connecmen of sterling character, of probity and tions above alluded to, will swell to an ex-

Dayton, Troy, Piqua, Sidney and Toledo, by reason of their extensive hydraulic powers and manufacturing facilities, have each a large population, wealth and extensive commerce.

Most of these towns have subscribed liberally in the capital stuck of this Company all of which has been paid and expended in grading and bridging the Road.

For the business of the country through which the Dayton and Michigan Road passes, it will, for the greater distance, have no rival; and from Sidney north, it will pass through a wide district of country which can have no outlet or access to market save over this road.

The country through which this line, with its connecting link to Cincinnati, persen, is not only unsurpassed, but unrivalled by any other equal extent of country in the Union, in fertility of soil, espatulities of sustaining a dense population, and in all the element of wealth and prospects. In fact, as shown by report of the Auditor of State, nearly one fourth of the entire taxable property of the State is found in the twelve counties through which the line of road passes, trom Cincinnati to Toledo.
